Excerpt from Projective Differential Geometry of Curves and Ruled Surfaces In the geometrical investigations of the last century, one of the most fundamental distinctions has been that between metrical and projective geometry. It is a curious fact that this classification seems to have given rise to another distinction, which is not at all justified by the nature of things. There are certain properties of curves, surfaces, etc., which may be deduced for the most general configurations of their kind, depending only upon the knowledge that certain conditions of continuity are fulfilled in the vicinity of a certain point. These are the so-called infinitesimal properties and are naturally treated by the methods of the differential calculus. The curious fact to which we have referred is that, but for rare exceptions, these infinitesimal properties have been dealt with only from the metrical point of view. Projective geometry, which has made such progress in the course of the century, has apparently disdained to consider the infinitely small parts into which its configurations may be decomposed. It has gained the possibility of...
