A word of witness. erily I say unto you: If ye have faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove; and nothing shall be impossible unto you. 1 This is one of the great, deep lessons taught by our Lord. The difference between the minute mustard-seed and the mountain is not, however, one of quantity only, but of quality also. The seed may be little, but it is the hiding of that great force of nature which we call vegetable life. The mountain is but a dead, inert mass of matter, incapable of motion or growth. The seed has the secret of life and, with it, of growth, 1 Matt. xvii. 20. and, by growth or expansion, can lift and heave huge masses of dead matter. So of the prayer which is the hiding of faith, and so of power to prevail with God. The prayer may be insignificant in human eyes, and the faith, even in the eyes of the praying soul, so small as to seem nothing; but it is the seed of God, and hides the life of God; and in contrast to that vital principle all external obstacles are only like dead masses of matter, to be removed by the flat of faith, which Coleridge says is An affirmation and an act, That bids eternal truth be fact. Even where obstacles are overcome in...
