By Alexander Kadison

Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****. Alexander Kadison was a devout agnostic although he wrote many essays and articles on the topic of religion during his lifetime. The book Through Agnostic Spectacles houses several of his best essays on agnosticism. For those unfamiliar with the term, agnostic refers to a person who claims neither belief nor disbelief in a higher power, or God. This book begins with Kadison's creed which states Reason my final arbiter shall be; Blind faith is barred from my philosophy. Nor God nor Christ know I: my deity is Man; my creed bows to no fetish. Neither do I crave salvation in a life beyond the grave: Far better strive mankind on earth to save through word and deed. This creed sets the tone, not just for Kadison's approach to religion, but for the entire text of the book. The line: Blind faith is barred from my philosophy alone establishes that Kadison has made it his mission to investigate religion instead of blindly following it. In Through Agnostic Spectacles readers are given a glimpse of this scholar...
