Excerpt: . . . nobler purpose, and a greater achievement, not only for the Company, but also for our fair city of Dayton. In Far-OH Edlnburjh. Most heartily do I congratulate the Company and its employes and its officers over the settlement of the difliculty. I was thinking this evening, gentlemen, about one evening last summer when you were gathered here in this country, mourning the loss of one who helped to build up this Company. A message was handed to me in the old city of Edinburgh from one of the officers of this Company, telling that one loved member of the Company had passed away. I want to bear testimony to the loving sympathy and brotherly interest that was manifested in that old city when it was announced that one member of this Company had gone to rest. It is a great thing to be identified...
